The National States Geographic Information Council (NSGIC) is focused on effective and efficient government through the coordinated development of geographic information and related technologies to ensure that information may be integrated at all levels of government. Our membership consists of the 50 state GIS coordinators, our sponsors and federal agency partners. The strength of NSGIC is our ability to speak as a single voice, representing the best interests of our member states. This session will describe NSGIC and several NSGIC initiatives for improving coordination of spatial data.
